Overview & Current Events

Matador Resources (MTDR) is an independent oil and gas company that develops, explores, and produces oil and natural gas, with an emphasis on shale oil and gas. It is focused primarily on the oil and liquids-rich portion of the Wolfcamp and Bone Spring plays in the Delaware Basin in Southeast New Mexico and West Texas. Matador also operates in the Haynesville shale and Cotton Valley plays in Northwest Louisiana. In addition, it has a midstream segment, San Mateo, which provides gas processing, oil transportation services and oil & gas gathering services, thus supporting its upstream business. The company produces oil and gas at an approximate ratio of 57/43 and has a market cap of $6.9 billion.

Notably, Matador performed its IPO in 2012, when it had ~7,500 net acres of land and production of ~9,000 barrels per day, and has grown to an oil and gas producer with ~203,000 net acres of land and production of ~211,000 barrels per day. Nevertheless, Matador is highly sensitive to the dramatic cycles of the prices of oil and natural gas.

On August 5th, 2026, Matador reported results for the second quarter of 2026. It grew its output 3% over the prior year's quarter, to 215,600 barrels per day, exceeding the mid-point of its guidance by 3%. In addition, the price of oil surged due to the crisis in the Middle East. As a result, earnings-per-share surged 71% sequentially, from $1.53 to $2.61, and exceeded analysts' estimates by $0.52. Matador has beaten the analysts' estimates for 22 consecutive quarters. This is certainly an impressive streak, which confirms the sustained business momentum of the company. Matador raised its guidance for growth of production in 2026, from 3.5% to 7.5%. As the crisis in Iran has lasted longer than initially expected, we have raised our forecast for earnings-per-share in 2026 from $7.00 to $7.25.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2031
EPS	-$1.07	$1.23	$2.41	$0.75	-$5.11	$4.91	$10.11	$6.77	$7.48	$5.76	$7.25	$7.25
DPS	---	---	---	---	---	$0.13	$0.30	$0.65	$0.85	$1.31	$1.50	$1.92
Shares¹	91	103	114	117	116	119	120	120	125	124	124	130

As an upstream company, Matador is extremely sensitive to the cycles of the prices of oil and gas. This is clearly reflected in the highly volatile performance record of the company. On the other hand, Matador has an impressive record in business execution, as it has grown its production by more than 20% per year on average since its IPO in 2012. It also enjoys one of the widest profit margins per barrel among shale oil and gas producers. Matador grew its reserves 9% in 2025 thanks to a reserve replacement ratio of 175%. This certainly bodes well for future growth.

In addition, Matador owns a 51% stake in San Mateo, which provides midstream services and is on a sustained growth trajectory. San Mateo has grown its adjusted EBITDA every single year over the last decade and has more than doubled its adjusted EBITDA over the last five years. Overall, Matador is highly vulnerable to the dramatic cycles of the oil and gas industry but it is one of the fastest-growing upstream players. Despite the expected deceleration in production growth in 2026, we expect the company to grow its output meaningfully in the upcoming years. Nevertheless, given the high comparison base this year, we expect approximately flat earnings-per-share over the next five years.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	Now	2031
Avg. P/E	---	20.1	12.2	23.1	---	6.2	5.4	8.2	7.8	8.2	7.6	8.0
Avg. Yld.	---	---	---	---	---	0.4%	0.5%	1.2%	1.5%	2.8%	2.7%	3.3%

As a cyclical business, Matador has fluctuating earnings and price-to-earnings ratios. Excluding 2019, in which depressed earnings caused an abnormally high price-to-earnings ratio, the stock has traded at an average price-to-earnings ratio of 8.0 over the last seven years. We view this valuation level as fair for this cyclical stock. Matador is trading at a price-to-earnings ratio of 7.6. If it trades at its fair valuation level in five years, it will enjoy a 1.1% annualized valuation gain.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2031
Payout	---	---	---	---	---	3%	3%	10%	11%	23%	21%	27%

Matador initiated a dividend only in 2021 but it has grown its dividend at a fast pace since then. It raised its dividend by 20% last year and thus it has raised its dividend 7 times in the last 5 years. Matador also earned an upgrade in its credit rating from Fitch, from BB- to BB, in May 2025, thanks to strong business execution and its high-quality properties.

However, the company has a somewhat weak balance sheet, with net debt of $6.5 billion or 94% of the market cap of the stock. While this amount of debt is easily manageable under normal business conditions, it is likely to burden the company in the event of a downturn. Matador is inevitably vulnerable to the downturns of the energy sector, as its earnings are extremely sensitive to the prices of oil and natural gas. Consequently, the stock is not suitable for income-oriented investors. It is suitable only for investors with a strong conviction for higher oil and gas prices in the future.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

The stock of Matador has surged 30% this year, mostly due to the ongoing crisis in Iran, which has disrupted global oil supply. We expect the company to grow its production significantly in the upcoming years but we also expect oil prices to deflate in the upcoming years. The stock could offer a 3.9% average annual return over the next five years thanks to its 2.7% dividend and a 1.1% valuation tailwind. The stock receives a hold rating. If the crisis in Iran persists, the stock will have ample upside but geopolitical events are highly unpredictable.
